

Intercom Systems — More Than Just Convenience

It is commonly known that intercom systems offer tremendous convenience to homeowners. With a few well-placed speakers, your voice can reach every room in the house.

But an intercom system can offer much more than just simple convenience. It can also be a means of safety, security, and entertainment.

Home Safety

Because of the intercom's ability to transfer sound from one area of the house to another, it offers a perfect home safety solution, especially when there is either an infant or an elderly member in the household.

Most intercom systems pick up distant noises such as a fall or cry, alerting you to issues that require a response. You can monitor a room where a baby is sleeping or where a family member who is "under the weather" may be resting.

Some intercom systems are not designed for two-way talking with any other station besides the master station. This means that the master station will be the only station hearing the sounds picked up by substations. However, there are affordable systems that give the ability to listen and talk from any station with any station.

Home Security

An intercom system for home security begins with the front door. Knowing who is ringing the doorbell before you answer it is extremely valuable. And peaking out through cracks or from behind windows is not the most effective method, to be sure.

While all front door intercom systems give you the capability of hearing and speaking with the person at the front door, the most reliable systems give you the ability to see who is there without ever letting them know that you are even home.

There are many affordable intercom systems that enable you to visualize your prospective visitor from your master station. After seeing who is there, you can decide whether or not you want to speak with them, let them in, etc.

Home Entertainment

While the convenience of being able to contact almost anyone in your home without making a ruckus is attractive, another feature of some intercom systems is their ability to make music throughout the home.

While most intercom systems will not provide access to music throughout the home, our system, will not only broadcast music through the house, but every room that has a speaker can control it.

So if someone is watching a movie in the sitting room, and two others are listening to a CD on the intercom, the one in the sitting room can turn off the music to the sitting room and watch the movie undisturbed while the other two continue to listen to the music.
